Hi George,

Our relationship has been a strictly professional and will continue to be conducted in a professional manner. The integrity and prosecution of my case depends on maintaining only a working relationship with you.

Like you, I have committed and dedicated myself to my job and work incredibly hard to maintain the utmost integrity and professionalism with all of my cases. It is my responsibility to assure that the all chemists are following the policies and procedures accurately and maintain the quality control/assurance of the drug lab. It is an enormous responsibility that I take very seriously. My colleagues call me "superwoman" and say that I do too much for the lab and everyone else, in general. I am not a workalcoholic, but it is just in my nature to assist in anyway, possible.

My professional life and my personal life are two completely different entities. Once I am at work or dealing with work related issues, it is strictly business. As for my personal life, it will be dealt with outside of the work environment and have no bearing on my cases. I always have and always will continue to separate those two lifestyles.

As I have iterated above, our working relationship is strictly professional and has never been anything other than business.

Sincerely,

Annie
